I have been trying this answer using awk, but it doesn't seem to work. The string I have is for example "foo". If I give the string as an argument to awk, it prints "foo" as many times as I give it: awk '{print}' "foo" awk '{print}' foo awk '{print}' foo foo I want to just print "foo" once, like this: awk '{print}' foo A: Strings don't work as you expect. A string is a string, and cannot be a list of strings. awk can perform string concatenation, but not to other strings, only to numbers. awk '$0 = "foo"

A: Try "${string[1]}" (more info in $ bash -c "echo foo" foo $ bash -c "echo ${string[1]}foo" foo $ bash -c "echo ${string[1]}${string[2]}foo" foo A: You need to provide $1 and $2, not just $2. awk '$1 = "foo" { print; }' foo /* Copyright 2018 The TensorFlow Authors.
