Category:WebcamsSummary of work: The result of aging in the form of changes in the structure and function of the lens of the eye are a group of related conditions that are collectively known as cataracts. Although there are a number of known risk factors that may predispose individuals to the development of age related cataracts, the etiology of the most common form of this disorder, cortical opacification, is unknown. This is one of the most common causes of visual impairment in the elderly population. While the cortical lens opacities that appear with age are anatomically discrete from the bulk of the lens, it is becoming increasingly clear that certain aspects of the cataract process are related to altered gene expression. We have identified the gene for alphaA-crystallin, a major lens protein, and have found that regulation of the synthesis of alphaA-crystallin is affected by aging in the human lens. Moreover, the level of alphaA-crystallin mRNA is correlated with cataract status in the human lens, as evidenced by the changes in message levels during the course of age-related cataract formation. Currently, we are determining how cataract development may alter the expression of alphaA-crystallin. We have also identified alphaA-crystallin as a transcriptional regulator of a second lens protein, betaA3-crystallin. Using transient transfection of rat lenses with a constitutively active DNA binding domain of the yeast transcription factor GAL4, we have demonstrated that alphaA-crystallin is a transcriptional activator. We have confirmed this finding using electrophoretic mobility shift assay and shown that alphaA-crystallin binds to a region of the rat betaA3-crystallin promoter. In addition, we have shown that alphaA-crystallin, like several other lens proteins, is induced by the glucocorticoid, dexamethasone.Q: Image as background of whole page I want to make a page like following image there's a background image and the text of the page.
