This book report concerns the novel “Dekada ‘70” by Lualhati Bautista. The theme of the novel is militarism. How do women and children feel about the presence of the military in the Philippine society? How do they react when military men take over and control the Philippines? The author, Lualhati Bautista, draws on her own experiences to depict the many challenges she and her family have faced. The characters in the novel are a mixture of good and bad. To a great extent, the novel is interesting because of the diversity of people involved and how they react to the presence of the military in their lives. (1) What are your views about the life of the military in the Philippines? How do you feel about the military being in the Philippine society today? The military in the Philippines is full of political controversy. This is the reason why the novelist, Lualhati Bautista, draws on her own experiences of the military in her novel, Dekada ‘70. This novel is a story of the Philippine military in the 1970s. Lualhati Bautista said: “The military was full of glory. Their mission was to protect the citizenry and the country. Their mission was patriotic. This is the message that they convey to the public.” There was a belief that the military would “never betray the people.” But this was not what the people observed in reality. As a result of the fact that many of the soldiers were stationed in the countryside, this military saw to it that the farmers were given inferior equipment. In one of the episodes of the novel, the soldiers asked the farmers to sign on a form which had only a “No” in the first box, meaning they want the soldiers out of their land. The farmers, as a result, could not produce enough rice to feed themselves. The military did not have a problem fighting the communists but they were not ready to confront the people. This made it easier for the communists to destroy the livelihood of the farmers. This gave the people no other option but to follow the communist movement. The military was full of hypocrisy.

(2) What are your views on the theme of motherhood and women? The theme of motherhood and women is not foreign to Filipinos. The first women's movement began in the Philippines. This was due to the fact that the early Filipinos realized the role of a mother as
