The ability of human sperm to fuse with egg plasma membranes depends on their state of maturation. Early studies of egg-sperm fusion have suggested that it is a requirement for oogenesis, but recent data suggest that gametes from a variety of species fuse in vitro even if they are not genetically compatible. The human male gamete is believed to be physiologically immature in vivo, because it is not able to fertilize oocytes and does not undergo maturation and acquire fertilizing ability when placed in an in-vitro environment. We examined fusion between immotile human sperm and egg plasma membranes (EPM) of fertilization-competent eggs. Both motile and immotile sperm fused with EPM in vitro. Fusion was assessed by the delivery of vital stains from the sperm to the egg cytoplasm. The ability of sperm to fuse with EPM, which occurs within the first 3 h of egg-sperm contact, was not significantly reduced by treatment with neuraminidase or with antibodies to poly(A)-rich polyribosomes. These results suggest that gametes are able to fuse by mechanisms independent of the maturational processes that are essential for fertilization./* * Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one * or more contributor license agreements. I have found similar questions on Stack Overflow, but they all seem to assume there is a UWP version of a .Net Framework dll, which is not the case here. It seems to me that the UWP version of the project will be less than that of the full .Net Framework version, but I am not sure if this is the case. Also, does it mean I won't be able to use most .Net Framework dlls in the project? Also, I am trying to use NuGet to install the dlls, but when I do, it tries to compile them in their own project, not the UWP project. Is it possible to make it use the UWP project? Or are there any other options? A: It seems to me that the U 2d92ce491b
