Field of the Invention The invention relates to a power converters and, more particularly, to a power factor correcting circuit in the power converters. 2. Description of Related Art A step-down circuit is often needed in a power converter system that receives an input power supply from a power outlet and then converts the input power supply into an output power supply for a load. However, because of the impedance mismatch between the input power supply and the step-down circuit, the line current of the output power supply, especially the alternating current component thereof, is not in phase with the input voltage of the power converter. This results in an undesirable power factor of the power converter. Therefore, it is desirable to provide a power factor correcting circuit in the step-down circuit of the power converter system that can improve the power factor of the power converter system.[Factors of the activation of protein synthesis in Ehrlich ascites carcinoma]. Factors of the activation of protein synthesis (cap and polyamine) and the activity of phospholipase D were determined in the ascitic and solid parts of Ehrlich ascites carcinoma. In vitro addition of 7-methylguanosine was shown to be more effective for activation of protein synthesis in the tumour cells from the ascitic part as compared with the solid one. Ehrlich ascites tumour cells from the ascitic part differed from the tumour cells from the solid part by the activities of phospholipase D, a high value of methylation of DNA and an elevated activity of polyamine ba244e880a
