I love design 3d models and creating my own archinectures. Sometimes it's time consuming to build 3d models, so to save time I just create as many small collages of pictures. I had been searching the net for tutorials on client side validations in Java EE 6/7 but didn't find anything useful. There is some information on the link below. Most of the blogs in web about client side validation says that it is not recommended and it may give server overheads and parsing overheads. But there are no tools available to validate client side from the java. A: While the above is true, you need to make it clear that JSF implementations have not been created to enable client-side validation of forms. The tooling for enabling JSF client-side validation was implemented in Java EE 7 to allow for the use of JSR-303 bean validation for non-server-side, client-side, operations. Java EE 7 will be the last Java EE version to support JSF 1.2/2.0 form validations. Starting with Java EE 7, JSR 303 is used to replace the older JSF form validations with a much cleaner, more efficient and flexible validation approach. However, the JSF form validations are still present and enabled (within the JSF page) in Java EE 7. The reason this API was included in Java EE 7 is because it will be the last version of Java EE that will ba244e880a
