Q: Debian packages aren't updating well Basically after the updates for i.e. libc-dev (that were installed some weeks ago) I can't get the latest version (2.17). But if I go to update/upgrade anything else just gives me the latest version. And it kind of annoys me as I don't have any other sources (besides apt-get) and I don't want to use the useless internet (I'm on a mobile connection). What can I do to get the latest version of a package installed? A: Use the package management system to install/upgrade that specific package. For example, $ apt-cache policy libc-dev libc-dev: Installed: 2.17-0ubuntu6.7 Candidate: 2.17-0ubuntu6.7 Version table:  2.17-0ubuntu6.7 500 500 trusty-security/main i386 Packages 100 /var/lib/dpkg/status If you don't want to upgrade that package, then you can install the other packages that depend on that package. To do so, you can use the following apt-get command. sudo apt-get install $(awk '/^[^#]+$/ {print $1}' /var/lib/dp
