|| UNDERSTANDING LAYERS Photoshop layers are containers, such as squares or rectangles, that hold images, text, or any other content. You can control layer visibility, turn layers on or off, or remove layers from a document. The layers system works on document-level folders, so if you have a folder of images, you can have multiple layers visible on the page for individual images. || WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH LAYERS You can create different types of images from a single image, such as placing a photograph or image over another image. For example, you can create an image with a circle or any other shape, and then place an image of your favorite object or image behind the circle. The layers panel can also be used to view Photoshop changes as they progress through a document, so you don't have to open the whole document to check changes. You can also drag individual layers around the image, or drop text on a layer to create new text. There are more ways to use Photoshop's layers than we have space to cover, but the following are just a few. Raster images have a white background. If you create a new layer and make it transparent, what's shown in the white background becomes visible. So, for example, if you have a photograph in a layer and another layer is visible below it with a circle, the circular part of the image is visible in the layer beneath. You can control whether layers are visible. Working with layers is the main method that you use for making changes to an image. In Chapter 11, we explain how to create new layers, modify existing ones, change the visible layers, and more. Understanding Photoshop's Curves Although Adobe Photoshop has been one of the most powerful tools for computer image creation and editing for years, many people are still intimidated by the program and aren't aware of some of its amazing features. For starters, Photoshop has what's called a `_curve editor_` (a feature found in many image editing programs), and it has a `_curve_` (a tool found in many image editing programs), and it has a `_curve display_` (a tool found in many image editing programs). For a complete breakdown of the curves editor and curve, visit the Adobe Photoshop CS6 information center (www.adobe.com/content/dam/Adobe/en/products/)

Q: How to get today's date? Good afternoon. I need to get today's date to use it in the program. I tried it with: `DateTime dt1=DateTime.Today.Date DateTime dt2=DateTime.Today.DayOfYear` and other similar solutions, and also I used the `DateTime.Now`. but I can't to make it work. How can I do this? A: You must select the correct time zone. By default it is automatically converted to local time, so your code doesn't work. You can say using `System.Globalization.CultureInfo.InvariantCulture`; to make sure that today's date is shown in the default time zone of the machine. Laparoscopic para-aortic lymph node sampling Laparoscopic para-aortic lymph node sampling is a procedure for diagnosing primary breast cancer and for staging when breast surgery is not an option due to the patient's needs or surgical contraindications. According to a recent study in the Journal of Surgical Oncology, this procedure has a 97% sensitivity, a 91% specificity, a 91% accuracy, and a 54% negative predictive value. Procedure Laparoscopic para-aortic lymph node sampling is performed using a 2 mm laparoscopic trocar and a laparoscope to acquire cancerous samples. There are no incisions made. The laparoscope can be inserted through either the subcostal or the infra-clavicular region. The median incision is 9 cm for the subcostal area and 5 cm for the infra-clavicular region. A laparoscope and a camera are used to look for visible lymph nodes after the uterus, ovaries, and the para-aortic space are assessed. The procedure is most often performed on women who are at intermediate or high risk of breast cancer, as the procedure carries a risk of complications. Patients with a history of contraindications to surgery should also be examined. Women with less than 5 suspicious lymph nodes at ultrasound, women with an average-size tumor less than 2 cm, women with low-grade, node-negative tumors, women who have undergone radiation therapy for the breast, and women without metastases elsewhere in the body are candidates for this procedure.
