NSC says Abdullah Abdullah and Martin
Fayulu could be in Ugandan capital Kampala within days

The South
Sudanese president's spokesman says the two opposition leaders can enter the capital of their country "within days". Obang Nyong has also said that Kiir and Fayulu have been offered a seat in the United Nations' peace talks, but that he does not know if the two men will agree to participate. The spokesman said at a press conference in South Sudan's capital, Juba, on Tuesday that the two leaders could be in Uganda "within days". The two opposition leaders have been holed up in the capital, Juba, for more than a week after Kiir accused them of being behind a failed attempt to take power. The South Sudanese army says the two were among 100 supporters of the "unity" opposition that tried to take over a key security checkpoint in the capital. The rival camps have been at loggerheads over who should be president since a peace deal to end the civil war brokered a year ago. Fayulu

---

was the official winner of the presidential election, but the electoral commission declared Kiir, and not Fayulu, the winner. {articleGUID}

Kiir has been in office since 2013, but as part of a power-sharing arrangement with the SPLM, he was supposed to step down as president last year. Instead, the president has been clashing with the SPLM, accusing the former rebels of being behind the latest rebellion. The unrest started last month after Kiir removed his main deputy, who had been heading the UN force fighting the rebels. Last week, the UN and South Sudanese officials
