Facebook, Twitter, Snapchat and other social media companies have faced a wave of criticism for what users say are unethical practices by the tech giants. The latest protests began in France, where a viral video showed a group of activists confronting Facebook chief executive Mark Zuckerberg at a meeting of the French senate on Tuesday. The video, which was posted on Twitter and then made widely available through other social media platforms, has been viewed more than 12 million times. Facebook did not immediately respond to a request for comment on this article. The group, Anonymous, is a global activist network known for its hacking and activism, but its particular brand of protest garnered prominence following a viral video showing teenage girls berating Zuckerberg in July for the way Facebook's live stream feature worked. The company subsequently changed its policy, briefly, on live streaming. "I don't think it's acceptable to have a CEO who's not even going to listen to the concerns of the French people," said Claude Pons, one of the activists seen in the video saying "you have been elected to represent us". Facebook France was quick to respond, saying Zuckerberg attended two previous meetings, but the group said it was the only one he attended, which was why he was called on again. "He should stop clinging to his illusions as if life was fair." 3e33713323
