By a vote of 178-47, the Senate rejected an amendment that would have repealed much of the health care reform law. That vote came on the same day the House narrowly passed a Republican-backed bill to repeal much of the health care reform law. The Senate rejected the bill, 20-58, underscoring how difficult it will be to reach agreement. Minority Leader Mitch McConnell called it a "partisan exercise," saying the vote was an attempt by Democrats to "smoke out" Republican senators before they take office. The White House said the vote was more proof that reform is moving too quickly. "It's really about that in order to be able to repeal and replace, they've got to actually have a 60-seat Senate," White House spokesman Jay Carney said. Not all Republicans were eager to go forward with the votes, despite party leaders' urging. Sen. Roy Blunt, R-Mo., said the process was "not amenable to the way I want to do business." "If there comes a time when I have to use the nuclear option to get to a final vote on the floor, I'll use the nuclear option," Blunt said. Democrats, meanwhile, celebrated the loss of Republican support for the repeal. "What we're seeing today is that millions of Americans across the country are choosing to express their displeasure with this bill," Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., said. "The bill is no longer going to be passed when it's needed to be passed." Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle worked together to reach the compromise deal that senators endorsed. The deal, which would have postponed the taxes for two years, was needed in order for the Senate to take the step 3da54e8ca3
