Russian media is reporting that one of the key suspects in a deadly attack on the Borodino Museum in Saint Petersburg was shot and killed in a police operation, while another was captured by police. The suspect was identified as Sergei Khadrsky, 23, a citizen of the Chechen Republic. The Guardian reports that “multiple police sources confirmed that Khadrsky had been shot dead by his own bodyguard.” Khadrsky is believed to be the main suspect in the attacks on the Borodino Museum, which took place in November 2017, and the neighboring Kazan Cathedral in January 2018. Both attacks left more than a dozen people dead and injured, including the cathedral’s priest. The New York Times reported last year that Khadrsky “was suspected of planning the attacks and carrying out two of them, according to an account of those involved in the security services investigation, which remains secret for now.” Khadrsky was previously known as a notorious drug smuggler. He was sentenced in 2012 to 19 years in a prison in Chita, in the southern Russian region of the Komi Republic, the Times reported. The authorities released a suspect, Nikolay Polozov, who is believed to be the leader of a criminal group based in Chechnya. According to The Times, Polozov has already pleaded guilty in a separate case to supplying 2.5 tons of heroin to Germany, where he was sentenced to 12 years in prison. The New York Times says it is not clear how Khadrsky was connected to Polozov, or whether he had any ties to Chechen rebel leader Doku Umarov
