I am using Synergy shared connection to connect to remote server and transfer files via SFTP. Since file transfer over internet is not a pure FTP (not using standard FTP protocol) I am not sure how to do it. For example, if file transfer happens over http, it will count only time spent in http protocol. I thought about sending SYN flag to remote server, and it will return to me response with time left to transfer file, but now I see that some firewall seems to prevent me from sending SYN flag on the request. Is there a way to measure time of entire file transfer without sending separate http request? Also, is there a way to let target server say that it finished transfer in some time (it will even do that on own without any further request)? A: You will have to create an FTP server at the remote end, most likely. If the remote end allows another protocol to be used for the actual transport of the

The legislation, which also includes a new conservation resource permit, will be introduced in Parliament this week. The Government has not said what it will support on the legislation but has welcomed Labor's proposal to establish a Clean Energy Finance Corporation. Treasurer Tim Pallas said the Coalition had been criticised for its "hypocrisy" in failing to support the scheme when it was introduced last year. "It was Tony Abbott and the Liberal Party's failure to embrace an effective carbon price as the way to curb emissions that led to this," he said. "We've made it clear that we will support the CPRS, we will support Labor
