victory over visiting St. John's College Sunday afternoon at the Nelson-Atkins Athletics Center. The Tribe (1-2) netted six first-half goals to go up 7-0 at the break, and maintained the momentum into the second half. St. John's (2-1) was never able to get back into the game, and trailed 9-0 at halftime. For collecting this data, we performed 22.5-km long surveys from February to April 2010, in the whole area down to a local elevation of 650 m a.s.l. We collected samples with a dive-type of hand-held soil sampler (CE-TED Model 358; CE-TED company, Italy) by holding the brush-type probe vertically to the soil surface for 2--3 s, immediately after which the plant material was detached from the sampling brush by moving the brush vertically across the sample. The hand-held soil sampler was held at a set angle of 45° to the sediment surface, whereby the sampling brush was vertically oriented with the sampling brush face in the sediment surface and in line with the horizontal plane of the sediment layer. The vertical component of the brush on the sediment surface ensured that the brush face was at the same depth and thus maintained the same sediment properties at different sampling depths. To evaluate the sampling efficiency, we established a parallel survey of around 1.5 km in length on the same day using the same sampling methods. The same sampling locations were used in both surveys. The plant material was placed in a plastic bag, the plant material was dried in an oven (EMCO 5d, EMCO Company, Germany) at 70 °C for 12 hours, and then the dried plant material was ground in a mortar and sieved through a 0.25-mm mesh. Plant material in the mesh was placed in a plastic bag, and the contents of the mesh bag were transferred to a glass vial. A subsample from each mesh bag was air-dried, and the mean diameter and weight were measured. Soil samples were similarly collected and dried at 70 °
