Exceptional circular dichroism and molecular docking studies reveal that tetrathiafulvalene containing thiophene-based conjugates are potent inhibitors of β -secretase activity. Reducing amyloid-beta ($A\beta$) levels in the brain is the ultimate goal of research focused on Alzheimer's disease (AD). β -Secretase (BACE1) plays a key role in $A\beta$ production. In this report, we have designed two classes of tetrathiafulvalene (TTF)-containing thiophene derivatives and evaluated their inhibitory potency against BACE1. The two classes of thiophene derivatives were comprised of brominated derivatives with either a phenyl (Series 1) or a 2-(3,5-dimethylphenyl)thiophene moiety (Series 2). The BACE1 inhibition of both Series 1 and Series 2 compounds was evaluated in an enzyme inhibition assay in vitro. The phenyl derivatives of both series did not show any enzyme inhibition. However, the thiophene derivatives of both series caused a very high inhibition of the BACE1 activity. Among all the compounds, the phenyl derivative of Series 2 exhibited the highest activity as it inhibited BACE1 activity with an IC_{50} of 9.83 μ M. Furthermore, molecular docking studies suggest the interaction of this compound with residues at the active site of the enzyme. the difficulty of reaching SE score \
